You're probably wondering; what is a “speeder!?”

To answer that, it is a small vehicle that was once built for use by railroads on their tracks in the 19th - 20th century; with some being made as recent as the 1980s. They earned the “speeder” nickname because they could carry a track crew much faster than a non-motorized hand car. With the invention of retractable wheels that could enable a standard car or truck to ride on the tracks, the railroads began to sell off the “speeders” for scrap prices. Many were bought by some who just wanted a piece of memorabilia or saw some potential in them. Shortly after most were sold off, some were restored to operating condition. Most of the people who bought them helped form the North American Railcar Operator's Association (NARCOA) – an organization founded to promote safe and legal operation of the “speeders.” The speeder hobby has grown significantly since then and is very popular throughout the United States and Canada.
